A Word for the Week: "In people love and wisdom appear as two separate attributes; but in themselves they are still in a distinct combination one, since the wisdom in a person accords with his love, and the love in him accords with his wisdom. Wisdom that is not united with its love appears as though it were wisdom, and yet it is not. And love that is not united with its wisdom appears as though it were the love proper to wisdom, even though it is not. For each must take its essence and its life from the other in a reciprocal exchange." (Divine Love and Wisdom 39)

Have a blessed week!
